WHEAT PRICES DROP AND LEAVE TRADE DEPRESSED

STOCKS UNSETTLED BY WEEK-END DEVELOPMENTS

Sharp Break in Latter Part of Week Was Only Partially Checked.

recent reports that reserves in the Northwest were extremely meagre.

Factors in the Speculation.

It was agreed, however, that the movement of winter wheat would have been larger had it not been for the extremely long period of heavy rains in Kansas and through the Mississippi Valley, As a rule, reports from markets in Europe were rather conflicting and unsatisfactory. Holders here were confused because of the weakness in European markets, Firmness was expected because of the many reports of damage to crops on the continent by the hot and dry weather. The total world's exports proved to be father larger than expected, although still far below estimated import requirements. Then, too, a big reduction was reported in our visible supply on Monday and in the world's visible supply on Tuesday.

Late in the week the market was 183 timely rainfall, but otherwise the wea-ther was excellent, and therefore it was the general impression that harvest-ing will be well under way in parts of the Southwest next week.

the Southwest next week.

Selling was stimulated partly by feverable reports from several authentic sources, and especially from the Ohio State Board of Agriculture, which makes the condition 94 in that State, against 92 last month, and 77 a year ago. Furthermore, reports from Kansas Intimated that the United States crop agent there will, in his next report, raise the area in that State to 6, 500,000 acres as against 5,782,000, last month, which suggested a yield of 92, 514,000 bushels. This increase will, however, he partly offset by a decline however, be partly offset by a decline la condition. The down turn in values was checked partly by increased interest on the part of exporters, who have bought more freely both of old and new for forward shipments.

Dull Corn Market.

Most of the week trade in the local corn market has been decidedly dult. As a rule, traders are inclined to hold aloof. Most of them consider prices high, but owing to the light supply, and fear of manipulation they do not dare to sell short, at least, with any freedom. One of the most important features was the sale of a part cargo of Argentine corn, said to be about 25,000 bushels, to arrive next month. This unprecedented transaction natur-This unprecedented transaction natur-

This unprecedented transaction naturally created great interest, and it is claimed that further sales of this character will be made unless supplies of domestic corn suddenly become larger and prices weaken.

Unfortunately the movement of corn from the West continues small, not withstanding the unusually high prices current. Local dealers, as well as exporters, have been comparatively idle, partly because of the great scarcity of desirable grades and the high views of holders. of holders.

Cotton Market's Week.

It was a week of great irregularity in the cotton markets, with violent and frequent fluctuations on the variable weather and crop news. A sharp advance was begun with the resumption of business on Monday, which carried prices up 4 cents to 48 points for the general option list here. July sold at 10.27 on this movement; August, 10.11; October, 2.65; December, 2.51, and January, 2.47. These high prices were reached after the publication of the government's crop report on Tuesday. This proved, on a closer study of its figures in detail by States, as more unfavorable than many had supposed on the first reading of the average condition of the plants and the estimated acreage.

There was so much speculative buying by trade interests and Wall Street were about 20 points from the top, chiefly on the pressure of profit-taking sales and some reselling on the lull in the buying movement. Other factors helping along this reaction have been the slightly more favorable news from the ficoded sections of the cotton belt and the dullness of the foreign markets, where business has been interrupted by the Whitsuntide observance of almost a week of holidays.

Such a movement has become almost a fixed tradition in the stock market with the professional elements ince the era when control and regulation of corporation affairs became a prominent subject of legislative attention. The adjournment of congress is regarded from the point of view of that element as a promise of surcease from threatened activities, which are viewed with more or less nervous apprehension by security holders.

The reports later in the week of further prosecutions in contemplation against the Standard Oil Company, and of possible fine running to a maximum even greater than those in the former sulfs, caused a revision of sentiment in the minds of speculators who had assumed a period of exemption for corporations. This feeling was responsible in part for the sharp reaction in prices.

Outside the element of professional and habitual stock operations, it is difficult to realize how large a part the expected Union Pacific bond issue has played in the movement of the securities market. Large operations have tles market. Large operations have been based constantly upon the supposition that the friends of the Union Pacific property primarily and bankers and capitalists, moved by similar motives have fostered and protected the upward movement of prices to help on the demand for projected new capital issues. The action of the market from time to time seemed to show the powerful control exercised by these forces. With the conclusion of the Union Pacific transaction there arose misgivings over the future action of the market.

One wily milkman, whose milk had been carmined one day, drove around to a Greek ice cream factory—there are a dozen of them here—and found a man who was eager to buy the red milk. The milkman suggested its use for strawberry ice cream and the dealer jumped at the bargain. The milkman fipped the plan off to all his milkman friends, and now as soon as a milk inspector has "spiked" a can of the fluid that has been found wanting the milkman trots off to the Greek, and "strawberry" ice cream is again on the market. Arrests of dealers in the red ice cream are expected.
